Analysis

The June report discusses the full month results for May and the run-rates for the first 15 days of June. The month-over-month (MoM) figures for May show some strength with an increase in spending, plus relatively-flat pricing. Furthermore, there has been an increase in workforce after a long-term trend of attrition. On a year-over-year (YoY) basis, May saw flat spending and a significant reduction in price with a moderate reduction in employment. The run-rate for June indicates flat trends in spending and pricing. Workforce data is only available for the full month of May.

	 Facteus Spend Analysis	 Flywheel Price Dynamics	 revelio labs Employment Metrics
May (MoM YoY)	8.45% 0.21%	-1.37% -13.29%	0.48% -2.54%
June RR - 15 days (MoM YoY)	-1.65% -0.81%	-1.76% -9.75%

Conclusion

The alternative data provided by Facteus, Flywheel, and Revelio shows some strength in the US consumer-sector, with slightly improved conditions versus last month. The YoY decrease in May's prices points to the lower-inflation environment compared to relatively higher-inflation last year. Additionally, the workforce has grown, representing a further improvement in this fundamental driver's trend.
